Since the establishment of the NCI-60 screen in the mid-1980s, this panel of cell lines has proven useful for identifying novel anticancer agents. The NCI-60 screen remains an important tool in drug discovery and development and is still one of the most extensively studied cell lines panel. This article provides a brief overview of the NCI-60 cell lines and summarizes the NCI-60 dataset of anticancer agents.The Perils of Co-Parenting But co-parenting can be great — if you follow these tips. The Importance of Becoming Each Other's Best Friend The first thing to understand when you're co-parenting is that you will have your ups and downs. You'll have "me" days and "you" days, and more times than not, you'll have both. It's during these times that you need to support each other the most. You'll want to work together on deciding what's best for your child. This is the first step in gaining a true friendship, and this is what you have in common with your partner. You'll need to make sure to trust each other to make those decisions — and to respect their decisions. Trust that they love your child as much as you do. It can be hard to be on the receiving end of a decision to not co-parent, but it's best that you do. What Not to Say to Each Other The next step is to not have conversations with each other that can make the other person feel bad. Avoid conversations about the other parent's parenting skills, or talk negatively about the other parent. While you're learning to co-parent, you'll need to learn to be good about letting things go. You may be able to control the situation a bit more than the other parent, and it's best to avoid getting into a fight about it. If you want to maintain a good friendship with your partner, avoid doing anything that will make them 82157476af
